General Earle G. Wheeler
Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff
Washington, D. C. 20301

Dear Bus:

Thank you for the invitation to participate in BETA I and II-67. The subject is most timely, and I am sorry that I shall be unable to participate because of previous commitments. The Central Intelligence Agency will be represented on the senior team by Vice Admiral Rufus L. Taylor, the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence, and Mr. Sherman Kent, the Director of National Estimates. Mr. R. J. Smith, the Deputy Director for Intelligence, will act as the alternate for Vice Admiral Taylor, and Mr. Abbot Smith, the Deputy Director of National Estimates, for Mr. Kent.

We are selecting well-qualified officers for participation as action-level players on the US, USSR, and Control teams. Their names will be furnished to the game staff during the early part of April.

Working relationships are well established between the Joint War Games Agency (JWGA) and CIA. Our library and graphics facilities have been made available to your officers for research purposes. On 23 March a team of JWGA project officers gave us an initial briefing on the game concept and organization. Other briefings and meetings are anticipated as the development of the game progresses.

The current national interest in the subject should produce some lively discussions and contribute to the success of the game.

BETA I and II-67*

CONCEPT

15 March 1967

BETA I-67

1st MOVE: In BETA I the initial scenario will assume that the United States and Soviet Union have achieved an acceptable treaty which results in the elimination of the present Soviet ABM complexes and deters the United States from either deploying ABM's or drastically upgrading its offensive capabilities, i. e., POSEIDON. In this game the initial scenario might carry time forward five years to a situation in which the Red Chinese and United States became embroiled in another Asian confrontation (Korea, Taiwan, Thailand, Burma or India) and the United States is faced with massive Red Chinese ground commitments backed up by a limited ICBM capability.

In this situation neither the US nor USSR would possess a capability for intercepting Chinese nuclear weapons and there would have to be total reliance on deterrence.

In researching this scenario, material will be solicited regarding possible Soviet moves to circumvent and/or to violate the treaty in order to highlight these kinds of pitfalls.

BETA II-67

1st MOVE: In BETA II the initial scenario will depict a world in which efforts to achieve an understanding with the Soviet Union had failed and both the US and USSR had launched ABM programs. These might be light or heavy programs depending on the opinions collected in interviews and probably should include shelter programs. The crisis in this scenario would be roughly parallel to that in BETA I except here, of course, the US and Soviets would both have a capability of stopping a limited Chinese nuclear attack.

In researching this scenario every effort will be made to obtain inputs relating to possible failure of US/Soviet negotiations in order to illuminate possible difficulties in this area.

*BETA I and II will be senior-level games conducted simultaneously with a single Control Group preparing scenario projections for the two games. An action-level and a senior-level critique will be conducted approximately one week after the third team move.

It will probably take the first two moves in both games to fully develop the situation, leaving the third move to raise the level of escalation to a point where the US and Soviet Union are directly involved. Somewhere in the game it will be desirable to bring out the probable views of the British, French and Japanese and to underline the tremendous importance of public reactions regardless of the probable efficacy of ABM systems.

It might be useful in BETA I to develop a situation in which the national interests of both the US and Soviet Union were adversely affected for lack of an ABM system. It would be equally useful if the destabilizing effect of ABM systems on both sides could be carried through to an extreme but still plausible point, i. e., both Washington and Moscow are heavily ringed and sheltered but offensive capabilities on both sides practically guarantee mutual destruction. This scenario should depict the associated social and economic costs.

BETA II might also be used to make Joseph Alsop's point regarding the sheer futility of Nth power nuclear programs in light of US/SU ABM deployments.

In early discussions of the BETA concept, consideration was given to committing the entire first move of both games to treaty negotiations. This, in effect, would give the Red Team an opportunity to consider and respond to a Blue offer and for the Blue Team to consider a Red counter-proposal. Discussions in the Department of State (G/PM) indicate that this would be too much material to encompass in this game. It was suggested that the initial scenario simply describe the post-treaty situation in one game and a non-treaty situation in the other.

Dear Dick:

You are cordially invited to participate with me in BETA I and II-67, two politico-military games to be conducted concurrently between 20 April and 16 May 1967 in the Pentagon. Both games will deal with the subject of strategic weapons deployment by the United States and the Soviet Union and will focus particularly on problems associated with anti-ballistic missile systems. As usual, knowledgeable and responsible officials from all interested departments and commands will participate. There will be one senior meeting each week, between 1400 and 1530 hours, on the following Tuesdays: 25 April, 2 May, and 9 May. A final critique will be held between 1400 and 1530 hours on Tuesday, 16 May.

In addition to your own participation, I hope that you will provide your usual fine complement of key people to serve on both senior and action-level teams. The desired numbers of participants are indicated in the administrative enclosure which also contains detailed information regarding the game for use by your point of contact.

The Joint War Games Agency is prepared, at your convenience, to brief you on the purposes and scope of BETA I and II-67 and to obtain any suggestions you may wish to make in shaping this exercise.

This is the first senior-level, interagency game since the SIGMA exercise last September and I hope that it will be equally successful.

Sincerely,

Signed - ~~Bus~~
